

Letter from the President of the Ethiopian Public Health Association

Dear Colleagues

The Ethiopian Public Health Association (EPHA), established in 1989, is a local non-governmental and non-profit professional society that brings together health workers throughout Ethiopia for professional exchange, collaboration and action. EPHA is committed to, and promotes, high professional standards and better health for all Ethiopians through advocacy, networking, capacity building and active involvement of its members. It collaborates with partners and stakeholders nationally and internationally for improved health status and livelihood of the Ethiopian people there by contributing to regional and global health.

As the host of the 13th World Congress on Public Health, jointly organized with the World Federation of Public Health Associations (WFPHA), the Ethiopian Public Health Association is pleased to invite you to attend the Congress that will be held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia from 21-29 April 2012. The theme of the Congress is “Towards Global Health Equity: Opportunities and Threats”.

As we meet in April 2012, it would be twelve years since the declaration of the MDGs and only three years before the deadline, 2015. The achievements of these goals require concerted global strategies and efforts aimed at increasing equitable and sustainable access of the world’s population and specifically the world poor, to quality essential health services. Within these strategic approaches in public health, the WFPHA and its members have significant roles to play. The 13th World Congress on Public Health is expected to provide opportunities to the global public health community including service providers, trainers, educators, researchers, academicians and scientists to get together and deliberate on important and defining issues. It will also serve as a platform for public health professionals to share their knowledge and experiences and re-enforce their commitment to jointly forge ahead with national, regional and international players and help nations take the last sprint towards achieving the MDGs and sustaining them thereafter. Based on outcome of the Congress, the WFPHAs has been providing evidence-based advice and recommendations to national, regional and international players and stakeholders towards the achievement of global health.

Holding the 13th World Congress on Public Health in Africa, Ethiopia, has major strategic significance for the MDGs as many of the participating African countries have weak health systems and under-developed socioeconomies and thus are faced with immense challenges to achieve these goals. Yet against these odds, communities and governments are making courageous efforts to overcome the many challenges. Some of these include policies on decentralization, decision to allocate defined budget to the health sector as per the Abuja Declaration, and forging public private partnerships, and involvement of communities are some of the efforts towards equity in health service delivery. At the 13th World Congress the community of health professionals will have opportunities to interact formally and informally with their African counterparts to get a deeper insight into the complex challenges and witness the optimism with which they are trying to find solutions. At the Congress major issues such as resetting financial aid and its effectiveness, household food security, health systems development, and global alliances for capacity building are some of the important areas that I believe will be well addressed. In this interconnected and globalized world it is imperative that everyone should join hands and contribute their share towards alternative solutions to speed up the achievement of the MDGs. The global public health landscape is also becoming increasingly complex with expanding old diseases, emerging new ones, and the potential for unprecedented level of spread of infectious diseases. The recent episodes from Mexico, China, etc., are reminders of how epidemics of high magnitude can emerge from anywhere in the world challenging the known control strategies. With global economic interdependence the magnitude of their negative impact can likewise be unprecedented.

Demography (aging population in the developed world and increasing youth population in developing countries), life style, nutrition, climate change, environment, natural and man-made disasters, pandemics such as HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and malaria, as well as population growth are influencing global health more than ever. Chronic diseases (hypertension, diabetes, cancer, other cardiovascular and degenerative diseases), long considered the problems of largely affluent societies, have now become additional burdens of the low- and middle-income countries that already suffer from communicable diseases.

The exodus of skilled health workers to high-income countries further weakens the already inadequate health system aggravating the problem in developing countries. Most biomedical research being carried out does not seem to be commensurate with the health problems of developing countries.

On the other hand it is recognized that good health provides the very foundation for a productive life, and thus health increasingly figures as a goal in poverty-reduction strategies. It is this appreciation of the interrelationship of health with development that the international community is converging for equitable global health opportunities. The WFPHA, as a broad based organization of public health professionals, can play important roles in bringing innovative approaches to achieve global equity in health. The Ethiopian Public Health Association is proud to be a partner in organizing and hosting this historic and important World Congress that aims at contributing to the realization of equitable global health for all.

I would therefore like to invite all public health professionals and stakeholders throughout the world to come to Addis Ababa and attend the 13th World Congress on Public Health. Your stay in Ethiopia will not only enable you to participate in what I believe would be a stimulating professional meeting, but also provide you the opportunity to visit a country recognized as the cradle of mankind. Ethiopia is one of the oldest civilizations in the world boasting with a rich history, culture, tradition and geographic diversity and hospitable people. I guarantee that your stay will be a memorable one.

Look forward to seeing you at the Congress in Addis Abeba, Ethiopia in April 2012

Best regards

Dr. Tewabech Bishaw, President EPHA

In addition, the WHO set out to propose a plan for strengthening the WHO’s role in global health governance, including the proposal for a regular multistakeholder forum first to be held in 2012, which will be further discussed at the World Health Assembly in May 2011.

The World Federation of Public Health Associations (WFPHA) joined the Alliance for a Cavity-Free Future.

The Alliance is a worldwide group of experts who have joined together to promote integrated clinical and public health action in order to stop caries initiation and progression in order to move towards a Cavity-Free Future for all age groups. Overall, the group believes that global collaborative action is needed to challenge global leaders and other stakeholders – including country and community leaders, health and dental health professionals, public policy, and the public - to learn the importance of caries as a disease continuum and to participate in action toward the delivery of comprehensive caries prevention and management that can positively influence the continuing problem of caries.

Neglected tropical diseases blight the lives of a billion people worldwide and threaten the health of millions more. These close companions of poverty weaken impoverished populations, frustrate the achievement of health in the Millennium Development Goals and impede global public health outcomes.

Wider recognition of the public health significance of neglected tropical diseases and better knowledge of their epidemiology have stimulated necessary changes in public health thinking to approach and achieve control.

This report presents evidence to demonstrate that activities undertaken to prevent and control neglected tropical diseases are producing results – and that achievements are being recognized. By 2008, preventive chemotherapy had reached more than 670 million people in 75 countries.

The global strategy to reduce the harmful use of alcohol which was endorsed by the Sixty-third World Health Assembly in May 2010 is now available for download from the WHO web page in its final form.

To better prevent and treat alcohol and illicit drug use disorders, the World Health Organization has launched the first global report on resources currently in use to respond to these health concerns.

The Atlas on substance abuse: Resources for the prevention and treatment of substance use disorders has collected information from 147 countries, representing 88% of the world's population. It has a particular focus on low- and middle-income countries.

Both documents are available from this web site:

On February 11, the WHO Secretariat hosted the first meeting of a global network of WHO national counterparts on alcohol. This global network was established to ensure effective collaboration and consultations with Member States on implementing the Global strategy to reduce the harmful use of alcohol. The aim of this first meeting was to discuss and elaborate implementation mechanisms and plans for the strategy.

More information about the two day meeting in Geneva is available on the WHO website here:

This monograph contributes to the scientific understanding of gender, women, and tobacco in the context of efforts to control the global tobacco epidemic. Topics covered include determinants of starting to use tobacco; exposure to second-hand smoke; the impact that tobacco use has on health; addiction and cessation; treatment programmes; and gender and human rights policy. The monograph also addresses national economic policy with regard to tobacco control, international treaties, and strategies for tobacco-free mobilization at the regional and international levels. Special attention is paid to an analysis of policies that affect girls and women throughout the life course. Men's responsibility to protect women against second-hand smoke is also highlighted.
